READING COMPREHENSION

You are going to read a short text about Tokyo. Read the text, then choose a, b, c or d for each of the questions 1–6.

TOKYO

Tokyo is Japan's largest city and its capital. When people talk about Tokyo, they may be referring to Tokyo Metropolis, which has a population of about 12.5 million. This includes the 23 city wards formerly known as Tokyo City (with a population of about 8.5 million), some small islands and the Tama area, which is made up of 26 cities, 3 towns and a village. Tokyo is one of Japan's 47 local government areas or prefectures, but it is called a metropolis rather than a prefecture because it is the most densely populated part of Japan. Alternatively, they might mean the Tokyo Megalopolis region, which consists of Tokyo Metropolis and three adjacent prefectures. The population of this region is well over 30 million. Tokyo is situated on the largest Japanese island, Honshu.

Tokyo was once a small castle town called Edo. At that time, Japan's capital city, where the Emperor of Japan lived, was Kyoto. In 1868 the emperor moved to Edo, which was renamed Tokyo and became the new capital city. The city grew in size as well as importance, but suffered terrible damage during the Great Kanto Earthquake of 1923, in which about 142,000 people lost their lives. Later, in 1945, wartime bombing raids destroyed much of the city. On both occasions, however, it rose like a phoenix from the ashes. In 1964, the city displayed itself to the world when it hosted the 1964 summer Olympic Games.

Today Tokyo is a modern city with a great many skyscrapers, including the Tokyo Dome Hotel which has 43 floors. It also has a big business centre, Marunouchi, where all the major companies in Japan have their headquarters. This district is a world leader in finance and business, as Japan has cutting-edge electronics industries and a strong economy. You might think that, due to this focus on business, a tourist in Tokyo wouldn't find much of interest but, as with London, this would be untrue.

Visitors should definitely go to the Tokyo National Museum, which specialises in Japanese art, the National Museum of Western Art, the Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum (which has more than 10,000 films, both Japanese and foreign) and the National Museum of Science, as well as the city's zoo. All of these can be found in Ueno Park. As Tokyo is the national centre for the performing arts, you also have the chance to take in a show of traditional Japanese drama such as noh or kabuki.

If you happen to be in Tokyo on the last Saturday in May, you'll be able to see the annual fireworks display over the Sumida River. In springtime you can picnic in the city's parks and gardens under the blossoming cherry trees. But, if you prefer to 'shop till you drop', you can do that in Tokyo's shopping streets and complexes. Go to Takeshita Dori (Takeshita Street) for trendy clothes for teenagers and, if you want to see teenage culture, go to Harajuku on a Sunday. Teenagers go to this neighbourhood dressed in costumes to look like their favourite anime (animated TV series) character, or ones from manga (comic books).

Although Tokyo is very much part of the twenty-first century, you can still enjoy the more relaxed side of Tokyo life and its seemingly eternal beauty by visiting its parks and the gardens of the Imperial Palace, and by watching fascinating colourful traditional performances.

READING COMPREHENSION

You are going to read a magazine article about foxhunting in Britain. Choose from the list A–G the most suitable heading for each part (1–6) of the article. There is one extra heading that you do not need to use.

Foxhunting Continues Despite Ban

1 Foxhunting has been going on in Britain for hundreds of years. Despite this long history, it is a very controversial topic. Foxes have to be killed to protect farm animals, and some people say that hunting is an effective way of doing this. On the other hand, many others are horrified by this 'sport', where a group of people on horses chase a fox across the countryside before it is finally killed by the hunters' dogs. They believe that this is very cruel and that foxhunting should be stopped.

2 Anti-hunting groups thought they had finally got their way in 2004 when the British government passed the 'Hunting Act'. This law was supposed to ban the use of foxhounds (dogs) to hunt foxes in England and Wales. However, the law had a number of problems or 'loopholes' which allowed hunters to find ways to carry on hunting for foxes. In fact, the Countryside Alliance, an organisation which supports foxhunting, claims that the 'sport' is more popular now than it was before the ban.

3 How is this possible? Well, for example, the law says that hounds can be used to follow the scent of a man-laid trail. That means that someone goes out with a piece of cloth covered in the scent of a fox, and makes a trail for the dogs to follow. However, while the dogs are following such a trail, they could easily come across the scent of an actual fox. If this happened and the dogs killed the fox, it would be an 'accident', and nobody would have broken the law. Similar killings could happen where packs of foxhounds are supposed to be hunting rabbits or just chasing a fox onto open ground so that it can be shot. Both of these activities are still allowed.

4 Other hunters have bought birds of prey such as golden eagles and eagle owls. This is because it is still legal to hunt with these birds. Hunters say that they use their dogs to force the fox into the open where the bird kills it. To most people, this may seem just as cruel as traditional foxhunting, but hunting groups claim that it is not against the law.

5 Animal rights organisations and even some people who have always hunted with birds think that this could be a very risky development. They believe that if the person handling the bird isn't very well trained, having these birds on a hunt could be very dangerous for the hunters and their horses. What's more, they say that an eagle, for example, will not easily give up an animal it has killed. This could cause the dogs to attack the bird, so either a dog or the eagle could be seriously injured during a hunt.

6 Whatever you personally think about foxhunting, it is clear that the Hunting Act has not stopped it. The government, however, does not want to change the law which it says is 'clear and simple'. Therefore it looks as though foxes are going to be hunted in Britain for some time to come.

READING COMPREHENSION

You are going to read a text about a boy who moved from a city to the country. Seven sentences have been removed from the text. Choose from the sentences A–H the one which fits each gap (1–7). There is one extra sentence which you do not need to use.

The Great Outdoors

It was summer, and we'd just moved to the country. My parents were determined to escape the rat race in the city. (1) _ _ _

I suppose I should introduce myself. I'm Ben and I was fourteen years old that summer. I hated the countryside. There were bugs that bite, others that sting and a savage-looking bull in a field at the bottom of the garden. (2) _ _ _ I had always loved going to the cinema, the sports centre or the shopping mall with my friends, but there were none of those things here.

I emailed all my friends, but it took ages for them to reply. They were obviously enjoying all the fun things you can do in the city. I was really depressed and I didn't think there was any hope of things improving, especially as my parents had also decided that I would be home-schooled. They thought that I would benefit from being taught at home, and that I would also have the chance to really enjoy the great outdoors. (3) _ _ _ Me! I had never liked animals or being outside, and the thought of getting on a horse filled me with horror.

It was still the summer holidays so at least I had some time before my lessons started. My parents were busy redecorating the cottage, so I was more or less left to do whatever I pleased. At first I spent almost all my time sulking in my room and playing computer games. (4) _ _ _ I started going for long walks in the forest and through the fields. I have to admit that I started to enjoy the peace and quiet in the forest. Watching the cows in a nearby field also seemed to have a calming effect on me.

As the summer came to an end, my parents started work. The cottage was ready, so they could start running their new business. (5) _ _ _ Before we had moved into the cottage, it had just been a shed, filled with gardening tools, but now my parents had installed a phone and put their desks and computers in there.

I was told that it was also time for me to begin my studies, and my first riding lesson was coming up soon. When I got to the riding school, I panicked. The horses looked enormous. I hadn't expected them to be so big. (6) _ _ _ Then, of course, I was asked to get on one of the beasts. It was a huge brown horse with evil in its eyes – or so it seemed to me.

I surprised myself by getting on quite easily. My new partner proved to be patient and gentle. (7) _ _ _ I learnt how to sit, and use my legs to get the horse to go where I wanted it to, although it probably knew the routine and just let me think I was in control.

The hour's lesson passed quickly and despite all my fears, it had been fun! There were some local kids learning to jump on their horses. I watched them for a while and then got talking to some of them afterwards. They seem like a really nice bunch. Like most of the people here, they seemed more relaxed than people in the city. I finally realised that maybe my new life in the countryside wouldn't be so terrible after all.

- A They were going to work in a small office in the garden.
- B It was obviously used to nervous beginners.
- C Without telling me anything, they had sold our flat and bought a cottage in a tiny village.
- D They'd already bought educational packages and signed me up for riding lessons.
- E They look much smaller in films for some reason.
- F My first maths lesson with my mum was a disaster.
- G Even worse, it felt like there was nowhere to go and nothing to do.

READING COMPREHENSION

You are going to read a magazine article about spices. For questions 1–6, choose the answer (a, b, c or d) which you think fits best according to the text.

Spices

These days, spices are cheap and easy to obtain. In most kitchens, you'll find pepper, cinnamon, cloves and nutmeg. Lovers of curry will probably also have chilli powder, cumin, coriander seeds and many more, while fans of Chinese food will no doubt have some form of ginger, the root, powder or paste. These are all things that we take for granted, but to our ancestors they were exotic and extremely expensive substances.

Spices were one of the most valuable things traded by merchants in the ancient world. They were not only used for cooking, but also in perfumes, cosmetics, medicine and even as poisons. The ancient Egyptians used spices when mummifying the bodies of their pharaohs. There is also mention of spices and spice merchants in the Bible.

We know that pepper was important to the Romans too; a Roman cookery book found by archaeologists listed pepper as an ingredient in about three-quarters of the recipes. The Roman writer, Pliny, also described the clove, so it's clear that we've been using the same spices to flavour our food for thousands of years.

Originally, these spices came from countries such as Indonesia, India, China and Zanzibar (an island off the east coast of Africa). To begin with, merchants travelled overland to buy spices, and settlements (which later became towns) sprang up along the spice routes. In ancient times and throughout the Middle Ages, most of these spices entered Europe from Alexandria in Egypt. All kinds of myths and legends developed there as traders told wild stories about the dangers of transporting spices, the incredible places they came from and the unimaginable wealth that these places had. To many Europeans, spices seemed to be amazing, almost magical substances.

In the late Middle Ages, Venice controlled many of the Mediterranean ports including Alexandria, and so benefited most from the spice trade. In order to put an end to Venice's monopoly, other European powers started looking for alternative sea routes which could be used to bring spices into Europe. For example, in the sixteenth century, Portuguese navigators (notably Vasco da Gama and Ferdinand Magellan) sailed to the 'Spice Islands'. These islands, which are now called the Maluku Islands and are part of Indonesia, were famous for producing cloves, nutmeg and mace.

During this period, other European countries such as the Netherlands, Spain, Britain and France were also looking for new sea routes to use for trading spices and other goods. This led to the discovery of new parts of the world. Dutch sailors discovered the West Indies, and Portuguese sailors accidentally reached the coast of Brazil. So, you could argue that spices are at least partly responsible for the age of European exploration and even the discovery of the New World.

- 1 According to the text, the ancient Egyptians used spices
- a in perfumes.
 - b to preserve the pharaohs' dead bodies.
 - c to cure pharaohs when they were sick.

- 4 In the Middle Ages, some Europeans thought spices were 'almost magical' because
- a of the myths and legends about them and the places they came from.
 - b they were so expensive.
 - c they were produced in Egypt.
 - d Alexandria was said to be a magical city.
- 5 Why did Portuguese explorers sail to the 'Spice Islands' in the sixteenth century?
- a They wanted to get there before the Venetians.
 - b They wanted to see if the myths and legends about them were true.
 - c They wanted to bring spices to Europe by a new route.
 - d They were looking for the New World.
- 6 Which definition is closest in meaning to the phrase 'take for granted' (paragraph 1)?
